

Jackson Kelly's Workplace Safety and Health practice is a firm-wide group with a nationwide practice, with clients in all regions of the country. We have one of the preeminent practice groups in the country. Our focus is on defense of state and federal civil and criminal enforcement matters in the area of occupational safety and health. Our attorneys represent clients in the mining, construction, manufacturing, trucking, hospitality, and chemical industries.

Attorneys in the Workplace Safety and Health practice group are equipped to provide a broad spectrum of legal services to employers, individual officers, directors, and agents, including:

- Defense of OSHA/MSHA matters
- Conference preparation assistance and representation
- Enforcement negotiation, administrative litigation, and litigation in U.S. Circuit Courts of Appeal, U.S. District Courts, state courts, and administrative appellate courts
- Advice on OSHA/MSHA regulatory interpretation and compliance
- Comments on proposed rules
- Safety and industrial hygiene compliance audits
- Accident and special investigation counseling
- Legislative analysis and congressional and state monitoring
- Agency policy monitoring
- DOT compliance assistance and representation
- BATFE compliance assistance and representation
- Development and presentation of training programs for employers, employees, agents, officers, and directors on legal rights and responsibilities

[[accordion2]]

The Firm's attorneys in this practice group have been involved in numerous national regulatory proceedings since the passage of Occupational Safety and Mine Act and have participated in many landmark cases before the Review Commissions and federal and state courts. These attorneys also serve on various state and national industry safety and health committees, boards of trade associations, and legal educational groups.