Sandra K. Zerrusen is a Member in the Litigation Practice Group, focusing primarily on commercial litigation and class action and complex litigation. She practices out of the Firm's office in Akron, Ohio.

Sandy handles litigation in the industries of pharmaceuticals and medical devices, construction, commercial, business, real estate, natural resources, and insurance. She has more than 20 years' experience litigating in state and federal court. Sandy turns chaos into order working with the law and the facts to build cases and defenses for her clients. High profile cases are familiar territory to her, and she works to make the case she's litigating impervious to the publicity the subject matter might generate.

Not one to shy away from the courtroom or the complex deposition, Sandy's most recent cases involved developing testimony and evidence during discovery that ultimately made it into the final order dismissing her client. A key part of her litigation philosophy is clear and concise communication with her client. Sandy prioritizes developing a rapport with her key client contacts to ensure real time effective communication to keep the litigation on track and the arguments in fact and law as strong as possible. While she cannot resist a good product liability case, Sandy's experience expands to representing businesses and shareholders in business disputes involving contract litigation, dissolutions, and fiduciary obligations. In the oil and gas industry, she has experience handling complex litigation, construction, transaction, and title curative matters.

Representative clients include a national pharmaceutical distributor, commercial and residential owners, general contractors, subcontractors, and suppliers. She also has experience handling insurance coverage matters, including commercial general liability, homeowners, and bad faith claims.

Sandy was a math major in college, and while you wouldn't necessarily think that this major lends itself to a litigation background, solving mathematical equations laid an excellent foundation for solving the evidentiary issues in preparing a case for trial. Her love of exploring may be attributable to her Navy dad. She enjoys hiking and biking in Cuyahoga National Park, finding the latest independent microbrewery, or the annual trip to Hilton Head. The proud mom of an Ohio State Buckeye, she is about to experience Big 10 football first hand in the Shoe this fall.
